Ever wondered why it's so difficult to grow most herbs and vegetables in our hot summer weather? Would you like to learn some tricks to keep your kitchen garden producing year-round? Or maybe you've never grown anything, but would like to learn the basics and give it a try this Spring?

Join Master Gardener and expert organic grower Millisa Bell, food plant nursery owner and director of the Holton Eco-Preserve, for an intensive, 3-day workshop that will answer these and many other gardening questions at the Alliance for the Arts on March 5th, 12th and 19th, from 9 to 11 am. Ms Bell will advise attendants about topics such as: best growing seasons for popular herbs and vegetables; best location for the summer garden; organic pest management and fertilizing; crop rotation and cover crops; an introduction to growing tropical fruit; and canning, pickling and using summer crops in the kitchen.
